

Saharmali
30.8.1929.

Dear Friend,

I thank you for your letter.

My dietetic experiment has laid me low. I am dictating this from my bed but I am recovering fairly fast and there is no cause for anxiety. These experiments have become a part of my life for years. They give me the keenest pleasure and seem to elevate me for the simple reason that the motive behind them is pure. What you say about Mrs. Naidu is ~~not~~ true. I am reproducing that portion of your letter in "Young India". Mr. Eliot has not sought my permission authority to invite friends to his reading room. But I should not think that anybody needs it would certainly be a good thing. Nothing else can possibly give a correct picture of ~~my~~ daily transformations that are going on here.

You have certainly my permission to quote from "Young India" whatever you like.

Yours sincerely,

M K Gandhi

Smt. Shankamal Mukerjee
New Haven
Connecticut

Mahatma Gandhi Letter to Dhan Gopal Mukerji, author of "The Face of Silence"

Dhan Gopal Mukerji (July 6, 1890–July 14, 1936), probably the first popular Indian writer in English.
In 1926 he wrote "The Face of Silence" the important early biography of Sri Ramakrishna.