My dear friend.

I can not tell you how grieved I am to send you the enclosed copy of a telegram which came for Mrs Powell.

India has lost her great son. But his has been a heroic life, and he carried the banner of glory.

Yours sincerely
J.C. Bose.

Written to Mrs. McLeod.

My dear friend:

A cry of anguish has gone throughout the land, which loves and worships her.

A light has gone out from us. See it was she maintained for us high roads. Here lie many who maintained for us high roads. Here lie many who maintained for us high roads. Here lie many who maintained for us high roads. Here lie many who maintained for us high roads.

My heart goes out to you, dear Jean, because you knew her as she was, because you loved her, and she also,

My dear friend

We could not keep her, no light has gone out of our life.

She was conscious till last, and thought of the continuation of her work. There is a great deal that she has left, which we have to complete. May we be true to her utmost.

J. C. BOSE LETTERS TO JOSEPHINE MCLEOD ("Tantine")

Acharya Sri Jagadish Chandra Bose (1858-1937). One of India's foremost scientific pioneers, an ardent devotee of Swami Vivekananda and friend to Swamiji's disciple Sister Nivedita, Bose expresses his profound sense of loss at the passing away of Vivekananda in 1902: "India has lost her great son" ... and also at the passing of Nivedita in 1911: "A cry of anguish has gone throughout the land."
